
How can I access GoFiler remotely from my home?

There are two basic approaches to accessing GoFiler on a home computer. Your software license enables you to use the software on one computer, so you will not be able to use GoFiler on a home computer at the same time someone uses the same license on a workstation at your office. However, there are options for one person who seeks to use GoFiler at home or at a workstation/office at any given time.

Option 1: Install the software on both computers and use the Unregister tool to move the active registration.

The software can only be actively registered on one computer. However, you can change which computer is actively registered by unregistering your license. By registering and unregistering your license, you can have an installation of GoFiler on your home computer and an installation of GoFiler at your office. Just remember to unregister your license on the computer when you are done, so you can move seamlessly between computers.

Option 2: Use the Windows Remote Desktop Connection feature to remotely access your workstation.

This option depends on whether your organization enables or allows the use of the Remote Desktop Connection feature to connect your home computer to your office workstation. All versions of the GoFiler software can be run across a remote desktop connection. Before selecting this option, verify with your IT department to confirm that this is an option for you. Your IT department should be able to provide more details on how using the Windows Remote Desktop Connection feature works in your organization.
